Take the advice of the agricultural experts—spray those potatoes.

The census bureau tells us there are two dozen Indians in Vermont, but there are a good many more than that when they all get on the war path.

Vermont's mountains are all right if they wouldn't wash down into the valleys every heavy rainfall, making extra work for the road makers and piling up municipal costs.

Some enterprising firm manufacturing baby's food is missing its advertising chance through failure to connect up with Babe Ruth, the heavy hitter of the major baseball leagues.

That woman who is reported to have spent $5,000,000 in three weeks in Paris is coming to the United States. Headed for vaudeville or the movies, no doubt, to replenish her pin money.

The story has just leaked out about a Vermont woman who refused a raise of $700 a year in salary through a change of position in government service in Washington. Wonders never will cease.

Hoover says we've turned the corner away from business depression. We presume that is so because there has been a good deal of henking of horns recently, and horns are honked at corners.

Even if we are not accumulating anything else, we have since January 1 accumulated 988 degrees excess temperature above the normal. In other words, the average daily temperature in the six months has been five degrees above normal. At the rate July is maintaining, the accumulation is likely to go considerably in excess of the figures already quoted. It has been a hot year thus far.

That children's strike in New York City against the high cost of ice cream probably was engineered or encouraged by the adults who had to pay the bills; but it was about the most effective strike that has been put through for a considerable time. The price of ice cream promptly dropped, and quite far too. That the dealers are still making a sizeable profit may be presumed from the fact that they are continuing to manufacture and sell ice cream; they wouldn't continue long if forced to take a loss.

The action of the Sinn Fein kidnappers in returning, uninjured, the aged Earl of Bandon whom they had kidnapped three weeks ago, is an earnest of the purpose of the Sinn Fein to respect the truce, which has been declared between the British government and the Irish republic. There is a likelihood, however, that the organized forces of the Irish republic will not be able to suppress all disorder and that the reports of scattered acts of violence will be received now and then during the life of the truce.

The decrease in the foreign-born population of the northern states of the New England division in the census of 1920, as just revealed, was due, of course, to the return of a large number of aliens to their native lands soon after the after-war slump in business developed and to the withdrawal to other states during the time when war industries were going at full blast. New Hampshire sustained the greatest numerical loss in this respect because of the fact that New Hampshire's mill center, are in large part made up of aliens or of citizens who were born in other countries. Vermont's quarrying sections were the chief contributors to the foreign-born exodus from the Green mountain state.

The German courts, after finding a few Germans guilty of violation of rules of warfare in the World war and sentencing the violators to short terms, have taken a turn the other way and are exonerating men charged by the allies with various serious offenses. The recent acquittal of Lieutenant-General Stenger of the German army, who was charged with having ordered the massacre of allied wounded and prisoners, is the most notorious manifestation of the popular mind in Germany at the present time. The Germans apparently are disposed to treat lightly the allies' demands for punishment of the persons whom the allies name as offenders.

ishment of the persons whom the allies name as offenders.

The promptness with which Georges Carpentier, the French pugilist, signed an agreement to fight any man of the light heavyweight type who should be selected by the promoter of the bout, leads to the belief that the Frenchman is more eager for the coin than for prestige in the pugilistic world. Possibly Carpentier is still amazed over the vast multitude—90,000 and more—that paid admission to see three and one-third rounds of fighting, and expects to see a repetition, or a small reproduction of that crowd, in his next engagement. It is not to be. There will be a small purse next time. Carpentier will then reshape his appraisal of the American public mind. The glamor is off Carpentier with his stiff beating at the hands of Dempsey.

"HARDING'S" MOVE.
 While the suggestion went forward in the name of President Harding, it is more than probable that whatever tentative plans the chief executive may have about a conference on limitation of armaments were the result of many discussions and not a few suggestions by those who are closer advisers of the president. Without a doubt Harding would be ready to admit such assistance was rendered and that what is going out as a Harding initiative was really the crystallization of joint consideration. Therefore, while agreeing that the move may be called Harding's just for the sake of giving it a handle, there is no reason why the people of the United States or of the world should become over-flattering in their commendation of the president. Harding is the mouthpiece but perhaps not the entire brains of the move toward a limitation of armaments conference. Let's maintain the popular balance of things if possible.

 "I've just paid $3 for an alarm clock, and I consider it positively disgraceful!" grumbled Brown.
 "But why buy an alarm clock?" answered Jones. "I have a dog that is as good as any alarm clock. He barks every morning at 5:30 o'clock."
 "What a wonderful dog!" remarked Brown, without much enthusiasm.
 "Yes," continued Jones, "all I have to do is to get out of bed and hit the dog, and then he barks and I know it is time to get up."—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

Modest In Opinion.
 This is a lovely bathing suit. It is, madam. But a trifle—er—daring in design. Ah, madam, a woman without a perfect figure couldn't wear this suit. Of course not. I'll take it.—Birmingham Age-Herald.

A Fair Ship

"A fair ship, in a fair sea, soon parts company with a derelict." So runs the old saying, the striking truth of which is often made painfully evident to the person without financial backing.

The person prepared by a cash reserve in a snug Savings Account rarely flounders when difficulties appear. And when opportunity comes, with the aid of his Savings, he sails smoothly ahead, and past the unprepared.

The Universal Daily Habit!

EVERY man, woman or child in this city who can read, reads some daily newspaper every day.

It is as much a habit with them as eating, or talking, or walking.

The newspaper is their point of contact with the outside world and with each other.

In every other city of any size, other newspapers are printed and other people read them in the same intensive way. In the great stretches of rural communities the newspapers from the cities radiate out through the mail boxes.

North America is literally bound together and welded into a continent with common knowledge and common impulses—by its 30,000,000 daily newspaper circulation.

Newspaper readers have come to look on the daily advertising as part of the news. They turn to their newspaper when they want to buy, just as they turn to it for the ball score or the latest developments across the sea.

Local merchants know this and they know they can build a larger volume of business at less cost through the newspaper than through any other means of contact with possible customers.

Manufacturers and distributors of trade-marked goods are also coming to learn that North America is a series of markets—each differing from the other in opportunities to sell goods.

Each good market can be reached by newspaper advertising at low cost and without wasted effort in barren localities.

For this reason the newspaper has become the greatest medium for national advertising, just as it has always been the greatest medium for local advertising.

The national advertiser can best cover this market or any market through the newspapers.

Manufacturers and distributors are invited to write for a copy of the book, "National Advertising and the Newspapers," to the Bureau of Advertising, 486 World Building, New York.
